Today the «Brotzeit» is usually just a small snack but can also be eaten in abundance to replace lunch or dinner and is popular in Munich beer gardens. A typical «Brotzeit» consists of bread, baked goods, cheese, meat and sausage, as well as vegetables and spices.

A Munich specialty

Die Weißwurst

The traditional Munich «Weißwurst» (white sausage) is a real Bavarian specialty, created in 1857 in Munich. The original recipe, still followed today, is lean half meat, bacon, herbs and spices, the freshness of a lemon and parsley.

Traditionally, it is made very early in the morning and preferably prepared and eaten mainly in the morning until 12:00. It was eaten fresh as there were no refrigerators 150 years ago and so the traditional has remained.

A topic that is hotly debated is the way the sausage should be eaten. Bavarians «zuzeln» (suck out) the «Weißwurst». However, this is not everyone's cup of tea. Others are happy to grab a knife and fork and peel off the skin before eating. Enjoy with sweet mustard, a crispy pretzel and a fresh Paulaner «Hefe-Weißbier».

The 1516 purity law

Das Reinheitsgebot 1516

The Bavarian Purity Law of 1516 puts an end to «experimenting». The ingredients permitted in beer were specified and the importance of optimizing the process was brought to the fore.

The Bavarian Purity Law is the oldest food law in history. Duke Wilhelm IV of Bavaria passed this law which stipulated that only barley, hops, water and yeast may be used to brew beer.

The soul of the beer: its precious contents

Die Seele des Bieres: seine edlen Inhaltsstoffe

A German brewer is only permitted to use four ingredients – no more. According to the Bavarian Purity Law of 1516, these are hops, malt, water and now yeast.

The Paulaner master brewers only use the best ingredients. The hops approved for Paulaner come from the Hallertau region of Bavaria, the yeast from its own pure culture. Additionally they use precious brewing malt and purest, softest brewing water.

The higher the quality of the ingredients, the better the beer. The Paulaner experts therefore check everything thoroughly using their considerable experience and good noses.

“Die Bayern sind ein derbes, aber gemütliches Volk, sie ließen eher Holz auf sich spalten, als dass sie zu einem Aufstand zu bringen wären; aber man nehme oder verkümmere ihnen ihr Bier, und sie werden wilder revoltieren als irgendein anderes Volk.”

«The Bavarians are an uncouth but sociable folk, they would prefer to have wood hacked on them rather than be brought to a state of rebellion; but if you should seize or spoil their beer, they will revolt more wildly than any other folk.»
